LA GUARDIA'S BEST SPEECH IN THE WAR WAS AN AIR BOMB

Congressman-Flyer, Back From Italy, Tells of Aero Adventures.

While a barber endeavored to shave Major F. H. La Guardia of the American Aviation Corps in his apartment at the Hotel Brevoort last night, an Evening World reporter endeavored to make the Major tell of some of the many thrilling adventures he had encountered on the Italian front, from which he has just returned after being in charge of our airmen there for several months.

The Major is a member of Congress from the Fourteenth District and enlisted in the air service shortly after this country entered the war. He was willing to talk of most anything but his own experiences.

He said that the American airmen were split up with the Italian squadrons. His team consisted of Major Piero Negrotto, a member of the Italian Parliament; Capt. Fred Zoppoloni, ace of the Italian bombers Major Negrotto had been in the said Major Negrotto represent the said his work was done in the Plave district and consisted in night and day bombing excursions into Austria. He was the left-hand pilot and acted as the bomb fropper.

It was learned later that Major La Guardia said the grant service, and when the Italian bombing school and has a record of putting a bomb at dead centre from a height of 6,000 feet.

One of the many thrilling experiences he said he encountered was when they were returning from a bombing trip over the Asiago plains.

Come, Let Mother See!

Major Negrotto had been in the marked on their return that it was very interesting.

"The Major," he said, "was somewhat of a humorist, He always put in his reports that the cenemies fire was medicore, and whenever they as well through the enemy barrage he would take off his gorgles and put on his monocle to show his unconcern."

return. Instead of bombing their camp, which was well protected, the Austrians had bombed unprotected districts. While they were doing this, they, the Italians, proceeded along their illuminated course and destroyed the Austrian aviation camp before they returned.

before they returned.

One of his narrowest escapes, he said, was on a night when they were returning from a raid and were just over the enemy lines when a well-directed barrage and a cross-light system of searchlights spotted them.

system of searchlights spotted them. They held the searchlight on them for fully four minutes, and their machine was well riddled with holes before they succeeded in reaching camp. Luckily no one was hit.

Major La. Guardia said he had made several speeches while in Italy relative to what this country was doing in the war. After returning from one of these trips he started out with his team on a day raid. Their objective was the enemy's aviation camp. Arriving over the camp, he said, he dropped his bomb, but before he had time to ascertain whether he had scored a hit his pilot, Capt. Zoppeloni, made a sharp turn Capt. Zoppoloni, made a sharp turn to the right. He said he asked the Captain what the result had been, and that the Captain throttled down the meters right over the barrage and shouted to him that it was the best speech he had ever made. Just what Major La Guardia's duties will be from now on could not be learned, but it is rumored that he may take charge of one of the aviation fields in this country. He has three Italian decorations—the Merit of War, the War Cross and the Medal of Knight of the Crown of Italy.
